

Justin Billotte

A new sound with a classic style, that's Justin Billotte. A new-traditionalist, bringing the legacy of country music to the latest generation of fans, with a fun show and a sound that is quite contemporary indeed.

With a tip of his hat to the musical heroes that have influenced him, Justin follows the lead set down by George Jones, Alan Jackson, Merle Haggard, Chris LeDoux and George Strait.

Justin began writing and performing music for church where his monthly musical contribution to the service was a big hit. He quickly discovered the thrill of pleasing an audience and was soon performing at local coffee houses and special events.

As a freshman in college, he wrote and directed a musical "Eternity" which was performed by a branch campus of Ohio State University. When the lead was forced to drop out just before opening, Justin stepped up to take on that role as well; drawing the largest audience in the history of that campus for a student-written production. His record remains unbroken to this day.

Justin's voice lends itself equally well to a variety of musical styles and while in college he tried his hand at everything from jazz standards to pop and rock. That changed though, while listening to the local country station one night. "I always thought it was strange when people would say a song changed their life...until I heard the song that changed mine." He remembers, "It was George Strait's "Run" written by Anthony Smith and Tony Lane, and it quite literally transformed my life and my career."

Justin began concentrating on country music and found an entirely new audience waiting to embrace him. With a smooth, country crooner voice and the ability to project his warm personality, Justin quickly builds a personal relationship with the audience. Justin Billotte is a showman in the traditional sense with a contemporary country sound that truly draws folks in building a loyal fan following everywhere he goes. He'll keep reeling in the fans and delivering quality song after quality song for many years to come.

Currently accepting bookings for show both solo and with a full band. Justin is also available for acoustic shows. His live performance is smooth as silk and suitable for all audiences. From favorite tunes from the past to the newest country hits, Justin Billotte knows how to bring it, have fun, and make it happen.
